ERASED FROM MEMORY: The MG Rover plant at Longbridge was demolished in double quick time. Labour covering its tracks of the betrayal of the British worker.

Labour's destruction of British industry

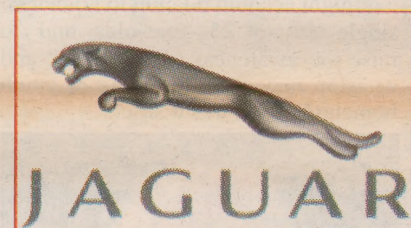

HIT HARD BY global competition, American-based motor multinational Ford, is to dump the once proud British brands of Jaguar and Land Rover.

Private equity asset-stripping vultures are already circling and massive job losses in the West Midlands and at the Halewood plant on Merseyside look inevitable. That's more British manufacturing shutting down, more British jobs lost and more British lives ruined by the 'global free market'.

It's a global free market that allows historic British motor firms like Jaguar and Land Rover to be taken over by multinationals like Ford in the first place. Vast conglomerates owing no loyalty to, and subject to no effective control from, our country. Conglomerates who are then able to treat British firms and their workers as pawns in their global game.

Ford downgraded the once prestigious and luxury Jaguar marque so it could cut global costs by using parts and designs from its other cars. Their so-called X-class Jag was basically a Ford Mondeo with a cat on the bonnet. A fact that was not lost on potential customers, resulting in sales in the key US export market dropping from 60,000 in 2002 to 20,000 in 2006, and causing Jaguar to nosedive deep into the red with estimated losses for 2007 of $550 million. Ford lost a record $12.7 billion last year because it was undercut in the US market by Japanese and increasing Korean and Chinese imports. Now the American car giant is desperate to cut and run from its British-built brands.

The BNP would bring British motor manufacturing back under British control with firms like Jaguar and Land Rover being owned co-operatively by their workforce

Land Rover is profitable, and its Halewood plant has just been recognised as the most productive in Europe. So it will be used to sugar the pill so that Ford can dump Jaguar.

As one tentacle of the globalisation monster - a giant multinational - prepares to dispose of a further chunk of British manufacturing industry, another tentacle - private equity asset-strippers - is reaching out to pick over the carcase.

All industry analysts agree that the jobs of over ten thousand British workers are now under threat, as is the very future of the plants in Coventry, Birmingham, Warwickshire and Merseyside in which they work. Some of Britain's most skilled workers will be dumped on the dole. Those of them over 40 will probably never work again, facing only a life of hopelessness and poverty.

Bereft of the wages the carmakers spend, shops, pubs and small businesses around the plants will also go to the wall, leaving communities in poverty and hopeless despair.

This Labour Government has betrayed the British working class. It has turned its back on them to bow low before the bankers and City sharks who now bankroll them.

Only the British National Party can save what's left of the British motor industry.

The BNP would bring British motor manufacturing back under British control with firms like Jaguar and Land Rover being owned, as a co-operative, by their workforce just like leading High Street shop chain John Lewis/Waitrose.

Government and the workforce would work together. There would be a national strategic endeavour both co-ordinated and funded by the State to support industrial and technological research and development.

A wall of tariffs would be introduced to compensate for the unfair advantage of using cheap Third World labour. This would ensure that foreign imports have to compete on quality on a level playing field. The British National Party would set Britain free from the 'global market economy' in order to save British industry, British jobs, British communities and British lives.

HALEWOOD: The workforce may have been recognised as the most productive in Europe but that counts for nothing in the global economy where it's all about cheap labour rather than skilled craftsmanship.

Charity changes its tune on offer of BNP help

BRADFORD British National Party councillors Paul and Lynda Cromie were delighted when they were contacted by the homeless charity Bradford Nightstop, and asked to help tackle the rising tide of youngsters sleeping rough in the city. Bev Johnson, the Bradford Nightstop Project Co-ordinator, wrote to the two Queensbury ward councillors: "I am writing to you regarding the work of Bradford Nightstop. This is a registered charity that works across the Bradford District. "Our essential aims are to provide safe overnight accommodation to homeless, single 16 to 25 year-olds and to raise the awareness of the public and decision makers to the issue of youth homelessness in this district."

PAUL CROMIE: Pleased by approach.

"I was very pleased to be contacted and asked for help," said Paul. "I am a private landlord myself and am quite aware of the problems facing young people, having had dozens of them rent from me in the past. "There are 28 secondary schools in the Bradford District and every year there are school leavers that face difficulties once their education has ended." But Paul's enthusiasm for the project was somewhat dampened when at the end of the correspondence Bev Johnson wrote: "I am writing to all the councillors except the BNP ones." Paul contacted Bradford Nightstop and told them he was a British National Party councillor. He also said how disappointed he was that a charity for the homeless was excluding people who could actually help their cause just because of political dogma. Thankfully Bradford Nightstop took on board what the Bradford BNP councillor had said and Bev Johnson replied: "It does look like I made a mistake and I would like to put it right. "In future I will ensure that ALL councillors are on our mailing list. "Your response was very positive and you obviously have a good awareness of the problems facing young homeless people. If you or any of your colleagues would like to find out more about our project please contact me."

"We will only treat you if you go blind in one eye"

An old soldier who had 'paid in' all his life

IN last month's issue of Freedom we reported on Les Howard who was told by North Yorkshire & York Primary Care Trust that they would only treat his wet age-related macular degeneration if he went blind.

Ian Dawson was the British National Party candidate in York's Acomb ward, where Les Howard lives, at the May local elections and he was outraged when he read of his plight and went to visit him to offer the BNP's support.

"Les Howard told me that he and his wife both have arthritis of the spine and if he loses his sight as well both will end up being housebound," Ian told Freedom.

LES HOWARD: With Ian Dawson, the BNP candidate for Acomb.

"He is a former soldier, policeman and prison officer who has served his country well. Yet he is being denied treatment, despite having paid a lifetime in tax and contributions to the state. It's a scandal."

Ian told Les of the British National Party's three point plan for ensuring that Primary Care Trusts can look after the needs of its British patients.

 Cut the bureaucracy. Target funds on more doctors, nurses, equipment and beds rather than wasting them on big salaries for managers.

 Stop health tourists from overseas exploiting our health service.

 No more free treatment for foreigners with AIDS.

Les said that the BNP was the only local political party to offer help. He had tried to enlist the help of his local MP Hugh Bailey, but all to no avail.

Thankfully he has now been offered treatment, which usually costs thousands of pounds, free by the Nuffield Hospital as part of its 50th anniversary celebrations.

"Les has been fortunate," says Ian, "but there are many old folk like him who are left to suffer and even go blind because our Primary Care Trusts are wasting money on foreign patients and overpaid managers rather than looking after the welfare of our pensioners. We have made the story the main item in our community newsletter, the Acomb Patriot."

The biggest and best Red, White & Blue Family Festival

THE Red, White & Blue Family Festival will be held over the weekend of the 4th and 5th of August and for the first time the fun packed family weekend celebrating British culture will be opening on the Friday afternoon, with families arriving from 1.00pm onwards.

"There are live bands performing on the Friday evening, so a lot of people are taking the day off work to be able to get settled on site by the time the entertainment starts.

"As in previous years we have a full programme of musical entertainment on Friday night, all day Saturday on stage in the main arena, and till late on Saturday night. There's also a comedian and a karaoke competition on Saturday evening starting at 8.00pm," David Shapcott, the festival organiser, told Freedom. On Saturday there will be a dog show with last year's champion Jay Leonburger, defending his title, a football competition, Tug of war, local history and British military display, archery, a 2.2 rifle range and a programme of political debates and discussions. This year there will be a licensed bar in operation which will have strict opening and closing time:

Fri: 6-11.00pm.
Sat: 2-5.00pm & 7-11.00pm.
Sunday 12-2.00pm.

No stalls will be allowed to sell cans of beer, lager, cider, or alcopops etc.

There will be a Church Service on Sunday morning 10.00am in the Political Marquee.

BNP Catering will be providing meals on the Camping Field and also in the Event Field. No other cafes will be allowed to operate because all of the money from BNP Catering will go towards the European Elections Fund.

David and Joan Shapcott have pulled out all the stops to make it the biggest and best RWB yet.

"There's lots more going on," says David, "but the degree of success of the festival is always down to the regional stalls and what they have on offer. We are hoping that all groups and branches will be promoting their own town and region whether it is by offering local food and drink, or by focusing on local

Register today for the six-a-side football tournament

AT last year's RWB, South Birmingham beat Leicester 6-4 in a thrilling final of the annual six-a-side football tournament.

This year's competition looks as though it's going to be closely contested again with six teams already registered and many more showing an interest in taking part. It is a knockout tournament and each game will be short with 2 subs allowed to "roll on roll off" so fitness isn't a key factor. Men and women of all ages are welcome to play as the main purpose of the games is to have good fun.

The cost to enter is £10 per team. All money raised will be donated to the European Elections Fund. Teams must have matching tops and it's hoped that there will be some colourful and imaginative strips. e.g Branch name printed on them.

All teams will be photographed and the final will be refereed by BNP chairman Nick Griffin. Several trophies will be presented at the end of the competition.

BNP on the ball over BBC bias

THE BBC has now admitted what the British National Party has been saying all along... that it is institutionally biased in its treatment of the issue of race.

In an official report commissioned by the BBC itself and published last month after a year-long investigation, it was concluded that a pro-multicultural bias extends across the service from news to drama, comedy and entertainment.

"The BBC does take sides on diversity," admits Helen Boaden, the Director of BBC News.

The report warns that the BBC is deliberately promoting multiculturalism and ethnic minorities, and the value of BBC programmes is being undermined because of this liberal culture.

Senior officials also admitted that the Corporation panders to Islam.

"We would broadcast images of a Bible being 'thrown away' but not the Koran for fear of offending Muslims," one executive reported.

In drama, producers admitted that ethnic minorities would seldom be portrayed in a negative light and programmes were used to 'enlighten' viewers with positive images of diversity.

Responding to its own report, the BBC said it would take steps to become more impartial in its news reporting at least. It promised 'radical impartiality' with views being sought from the BNP - the only Party that speaks for a growing section of the population now that the mainstream political parties have moved occupy the centre ground of politics.

And to give the BBC credit, BNP chairman Nick Griffin has appeared on BBC 2's Newsnight programme and Radio 5 Live within the past month.

NICK GRIFFIN: Now getting fairer treatment from the BBC.

BNP emerges as a political force in North Manchester

by Richard Purdy

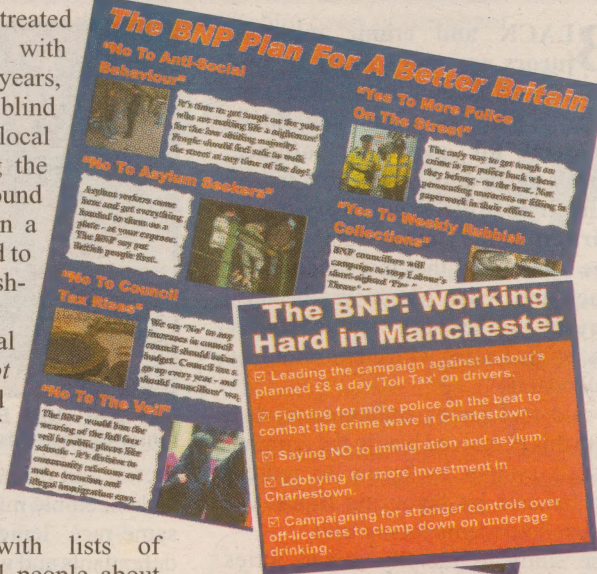

THE British National Party's recent votes in the North of Manchester have been acknowledged by the local Advertiser newspaper which reported that the Party had emerged as a political force in Manchester for the first time.

In May, the BNP sent shock waves through the city by gaining 23.9% of the vote in Blackley and then following this with 25% in a by-election in the neighbouring Charlestown ward.

In both cases the BNP candidate Joseph Finnon, came second and won more votes than the Tories and Liberal Democrats put together. The results caused apoplexy among the New Labour 'mafia' who run Manchester as a personal fiefdom - and prompted much reflection in the local papers. Back in May Joseph Finnon, the BNP's national student organiser, focused his campaign on the high-handed arrogance of the local Labour Party. It had treated Higher Blackley with contempt over the years, not only turning a blind eye to widespread local deprivation but using the ward as a dumping ground for asylum seekers on a scale which threatened to destroy the strong Irish-British community. The British National Party's local Patriot leaflet highlighted Labour's neglect of Blackley and the response was quite astonishing - enquiries poured in along with lists of grievances from local people about rubbish collection through to Labour's plans to wreck the local Heaton Park.

Support for the BNP on the streets was very evident and on polling day itself Joseph Finnon was greeted at a polling station in a school by cheers from the dinner ladies who all promised to vote BNP. At the count on 3rd May, Labour were clearly shocked as the BNP votes piled up - 716 of them. The local media gave the result wide coverage, with one headline trumpeting "BNP Shock Labour in Higher Blackley". The by-election on June 14th in the neighbouring Charlestown ward gave another North Manchester community the chance to vote BNP in a local poll for the first time. Charlestown had a similar profile to Blackley with a big Labour majority over the Tories. Labour bused in activists from all over Manchester and they canvassed the whole ward, pumping out the usual lies about the BNP.

The Tories in Charlestown were nowhere to be seen, giving the lie to David Cameron's claims that his moribund party is undergoing some sort of northern resurgence. Once again North Manchester BNP were inundated with enquiries and it was apparent that another good result was in prospect.

At the count in Manchester Town Hall, as the BNP votes tumbled out of the ballot boxes, the Labour battalions of timeservers and placemen resorted to childish behaviour and abuse. This did nothing to dampen the spirits of jubilant local BNP activists who retired to a local pub to celebrate the best ever BNP result in the City of Manchester.

JOSEPH FINNON: His votes in Blackley and Charlestown shocked Labour.

BNP stall at British Legion show

ALL six Epping Forest British National Party councillors attended a local Royal British Legion festival held at the end of June to celebrate the contribution made by our servicemen to the safety and security of our nation.

There were numerous local community groups in attendance with their stalls and the music for the day was provided by the local Police and various military marching bands.

Despite awful weather the event was a great success, not least due to the attendance of the British National Party. The Eastern Region of the Party had been invited to set up a stall at the event and this proved to be one of the main attractions, with a roaring trade in Freedom and Identity sales done at the Excalibur stall. The British National Party is always very pleased to be able to support such worthwhile community events.

This is in marked contrast to the Loughton Resident's Association who control Loughton Council. Not only did it not attend the British Legion's festival, but it also refused permission for the event to be held on council-owned land. Something that residents will, no doubt, have noted.

Nick Griffin on Newsnight and Five Live Phone-in

ON NEWSNIGHT: Nick and Keith Vaz.

NICK Griffin was a guest on Matthew Bannister's popular morning show on BBC Radio Five Live last month.

The invitation was prompted by the row in the Labour Party over Barking MP Margaret Hodge's remarks over social housing and immigration.

"It was originally just for half an hour for a discussion on the BNP and the usual phone-in questions from the public," Nick told Freedom.

"But when my time was up, the producer asked me to field calls for another 15 minutes because there were so many coming through. I was very pleased to do so and as they kept coming I was then asked to carry on for another quarter of an hour on top of that.

"In the end, I was on for an hour at peak time putting over the British National Party's viewpoint on a range of issues. It was a very beneficial exercise for both me and the BNP."

Just weeks earlier, Nick had appeared on BBC2's Newsnight programme where he was interviewed by Gavin Esler alongside Labour MP Keith Vaz. Once again Nick acquitted himself well exposing flaws in both Government policy and the BBC's coverage.

Union takes up case of suspended BNP teacher

A technology teacher has been suspended from his job at Sunnydale Comprehensive, in Shildon, County Durham, after he stood as a British National Party in the local elections in May.

Mark Walker, a former RAF weapons technician, was summoned to appear before principal Sue Byrne, who said she had been told he had stood for the BNP. "I was stunned when I was hauled in," Mark Walker told Freedom.

"I've worked at the school almost eight years and the governors know I'm dedicated and a very hard worker. I've taken the children away on trips and my political beliefs are no way in conflict with my professional role. I don't preach politics at work.

"My suspension is an infringement of my human rights and my right to freedom of speech. I'm being persecuted for holding a political view," he said. The teacher's suspension has attracted the interest of the Solidarity Trade Union. General Secretary Patrick Harrington, has personally taken up Mark's case.

"This victimisation is typical of the New McCarthyism that some employers are trying to impose on our country. Mark is being targeted because of his political beliefs. I am personally representing Mark because I believe he is a good teacher just trying to do his job. Hopefully good sense will prevail and he will be able to return to the work he loves. Our education system needs more people like Mark - not fewer."

At the local elections in May, Mark Walker polled 513 votes, nearly 30% of the vote, in Spennymoor for Sedgefield Council, coming second to the Lib-Dems and beating Labour.

Righteous anger & political action

THE British National Party believes in telling the truth - even if it's sometimes uncomfortable to hear or even offensive to those who would rather bury their heads in the sand than face up to the problems in our society.

But while we often pass critical comment on the impact of mass immigration, multi-culturalism and even foreign religions on the indigenous people of our lands, we have no animosity towards immigrants, their descendants or the followers of non-native religions.

Nor do we intend to encourage others to feel such animosity, or believe that anything we have to say is likely to 'stir up hatred' against anyone. In fact, we believe that by providing a peaceful and constitutional outlet for the anger and frustration felt by millions of our people over the undemocratic transformation of our country by our political masters, the British National Party actually defuses tensions.

Where there is 'hate' we seek to turn it into righteous anger and political action against the only people who deserve to be hated - the politicians who use our taxes to turn our country into a place where we often feel like strangers in our own land.

CLIFF ROAD: The South Norwood Islamic Centre is being redeveloped from a Victorian house that used to be a family-run printing business.

Scramble for houses around new mosque

Interest free Sharia mortgages and benefits for two wives

by Bob Gertner

As yet another new mosque starts to change the skyline in south west London, there's been a scramble for houses in the neighbourhood with Muslims snapping up anything and everything that is up for sale.

The South Norwood Islamic Centre was given planning permission last year by Croydon Council to redevelop a large Victorian house and outbuildings in Cliff Road that used to be a family-run printing business. The planning consent for roof top domes and minarets will change the whole character of South Norwood.

Local estate agents report a 'feverish frenzy' for property, with large four bedroomed houses and maisonettes in demand from a steady stream of Muslim buyers seeking accommodation as near as possible to the new mosque.

"Those selling homes within the vicinity of Cliff Road can just about name their price," reported one agent. "Many buyers are 'cash-in-hand', but others are taking advantage of the Sharia interest-free mortgages now on offer." And this latest influx of Muslims has been more noticeable because of the extended families of the new arrivals with locals reporting that some men appear to have more than one wife.

This could have come about because of new guidelines which now allow multiple wives in polygamous marriages. The Home Office even acknowledges that Muslims are getting bogus divorces in order to bring a second wife into the country and have briefed immigration officers to let extra wives in.

"Entry clearance may not be withheld from a second wife even where the husband's divorce of his previous wife is thought to be one of convenience," an immigration rulebook advises. It continues, "This is so, even if to issue the entry clearance would lead to the formation of a polygamous household."

Astonishingly the law allows a husband to claim benefits for each wife.

"If a man lives with two wives, his household is paid the rate for a couple, plus an amount for the 'extra spouse,'" states a Home Office document only released for public scrutiny after a Freedom of Information Act application.

EXTRA SPOUSE: The more wives, the better the benefits that are available.

Black and Asian offenders have 'friends' on the jury

Fear of racism accusations colour White jurors' judgement

BLACK and ethnic minority jurors are more likely to find a Black or Asian defendant 'not guilty' than a white defendant on trial for a similar offence. That's according to a report by the Ministry of Justice on diversity and fairness in the jury system.

The report said that this leniency by black and Asian jurors was because they felt the courts were inherently 'racist' in dealing with ethnic minority defendants.

It said that jurors attempted to deal with this perceived bias in the criminal justice system by trying to redress the balance by favouring Black and Asian defendants facing trial.

The study of racially mixed juries was carried out by Cheryl Thomas, honorary professor at University College, London. It involved twenty seven simulated trials where the racial make-up of the defendant, FAVOURITISM: Black and ethnic minority jurors were found to show same-race leniency towards Black and ethnic minority defendants.

victim and jurors was varied.

"Black ethnic minority jurors showed same-race leniency towards BME defendants and were significantly less likely to vote to convict a BME defendant than a white defendant," the report said.

But it wasn't only Black and Asian jurors that were unduly sympathetic to minority defendants - white jurors were too! They were fuelled by self-doubt that they might be showing 'racist' tendencies or be accused of racism, if they dared to convict Black and Asian defendants.

"White jurors serving

NOT WORRIED: Despite the report, Lord Falconer says juries are unbiased and balanced.

on racially mixed juries appear to be particularly sensitive to the position of a black person in a criminal court, as defendant or victim," the report found.

Surprisingly, Lord Falconer, the Secretary of State for Justice, wasn't concerned about the apparent reluctance of juries to find Black and Asian defendants guilty of the offences they had been charged with. In fact, he appeared to be more than happy that there was this 'race leniency' amongst jurors, saying:

"This study strongly suggests that juries and the jury system are working, and working well to provide outcomes that are fair, unbiased and balanced."

Fair, unbiased and balanced! Can you imagine Falconer saying that if the survey had found White defendants were getting off because they were receiving undue favourable treatment from White jurors?

Asian birth rate causing classroom chaos

HALF of all schoolchildren in many British cities do not speak English as their first language and one of the reasons behind this is a rising birth rate among non-English speaking Asian families.

This is causing chaos in the classroom as teachers and teaching assistants struggle to communicate. In many instances this is hindering the progress of British children who are being held back by foreign-speaking classmates who are unable to understand what they are being told.

Figures released by the Department for Education show that in Inner London primary schools, a massive 53.4% of primary schoolchildren have a foreign language as their main language while in the capital's secondary schools the figure is 49.3%.

This is set to rise yet further as the UK birth rate among mothers born overseas now accounts for almost 22% of all newly born babies. That is a 25% rise in just 12 months.

CHANGING: The dramatic effect of unrestricted immigration and the high Asian birth rate can be seen clearly in new school photographs.

In Sheffield, one third of all babies being born in the city are to immigrant families, while Muhammad is now the second most popular name for baby boys in Britain.

Sir Andrew Green the chairman of Migration Watch also warned:

"Arranged marriages which are being used as a form of immigration have harmful effects on integration and on our society as a whole."

A Councillor's Notebook

Sadie Graham - Brinsley Ward, Broxtowe Borough Council, Nottinghamshire

I WAS the first British National Party borough councillor to be elected in Nottinghamshire and am thrilled to be able to represent the residents of Brinsley. I am on three committees; Planning & Community Development, the Review Panel and Standards Committee.

It has been a busy time since getting elected. I have distributed a 'Thank you for voting' leaflet to all the houses in my ward. This advertised my surgeries, explained how I had dealt with the authorities to try to remove some illegal travellers who broke onto our recreation ground, advertised Freedom and gave my contact details for people with any problems they think that I may be able to help them with.

One of the first things I did was to contact the Technical Works department of the council to arrange for one of their officers to meet me in Brinsley to discuss the state of the roads and to deal with the problem of potholes. They acted promptly and within a week, a senior officer from the department, along with a colleague, met up with me in Brinsley. I took them around the area and I was able to point out places that needed repair and was informed of the work that was due to be done.

I attended my first council meeting which was mostly taken up with praise for the out-going mayor and a vote for the new Liberal-Democrat mayor. It was a unanimous vote in favour apart from the one abstention, yes, you guessed it, that was me. You should have heard the muttering from the public gallery because I had dared not to vote for the mayor.

Of course, it was a foregone conclusion, he was the only candidate. Then followed a nauseating display of back-slapping and praise by all councillors illustrating just how little difference there is between the three main parties.

Since the first council meeting I have been busy dealing with lots of different issues in my ward including a problem with intravenous needles being thrown from a footpath into residents' gardens. The council are saying it's a police matter and the police are saying you need to phone the council to remove them. No one wants to deal with it at all, so I am trying to set up Community Action Team meetings. We are the only ward in the borough which doesn't have them, but that is soon going to change.

My first councillor's surgery went very well. I heard from residents with a variety of issues and complaints that they wanted me to look into. Some of these were out of my jurisdiction but I have passed them on to the relevant authorities for action on.

Matters ranging from illegal parking, speeding, horse manure on the footpaths, overhanging hedges and planning applications were all discussed.

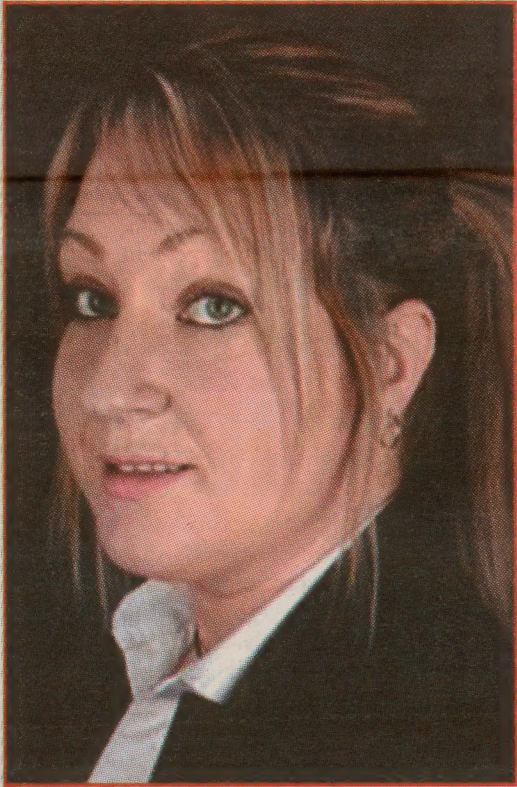

These might seem like trivial issues to most people, but if it is affecting a person's quality of life to the extent that they are forced to make a complaint about it must be addressed.

Many people think that councillors have a lot of power to make great changes, but the power you have is very limited. Being a councillor is more about being a voice for the residents and prompting the council to look into their concerns.

It's important to make sure that the residents know that you are acting on their behalf and doing the best that you can to help resolve the issue they have come you about. Even if you can't help, at least they will know that you tried.

I am still attending training events put on by the council for the new council members and have my first planning committee meeting coming up soon. I have already arranged my next surgery and this has been advertised in my local newspaper.

SADIE GRAHAM: Potholes in the road and intravenous needles top her list of priorities this month.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union to restore Britain's freedom. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need, an end to field trials of GM crops and restoring our 200 mile fishing limit.

FAIR PLAY FOR ENGLAND: The setting up of an English Parliament to give England the same right of self-determination within the UK as enjoyed by Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Please help us all you can

The British National Party made further progress along the road to gaining more political influence within our country with a very good set of local election results on May 3rd 2007. Now it is vital that we build on these gains, so the campaign for the May 1st 2008 round of local elections must start now. Funds are desperately needed to help finance this 'push for power' - please help all you can.

TUC still claims migrant workers benefit Britain

MIGRANT workers are a benefit to Britain, claims a Trades Union Congress report published last month, which attacks the British National Party for saying that the arrival of nearly two million migrant workers has resulted in job losses and depressed wages. But the TUC was forced to admit there was "evidence of some local affect on wages and employment for low-skilled workers" and that in the construction industry especially the almost unlimited availability of migrant workers was stifling opportunities for indigenous workers. But despite all of this Brendan Barber, TUC General Secretary, still said: "Migrant workers are making a substantial contribution to Britain's economy. They haven't caused mass unemployment or held wages down, as some would have us believe."

QUEUE JUMPING: The Labour Government has been giving newly arrived immigrants social housing in front of local families who have been waiting on the housing list for years.

Labour hid extent of immigrant social housing allocation

WHEN the British National Party won 12 council seats in Barking and Dagenham, it campaigned to put the needs of British families, who had been on the social housing waiting lists for years, before immigrants who had just arrived in the country. The Labour Government attacked the BNP, claiming that just one percent of immigrants were given social housing, in a desperate attempt to quell widespread fears that immigrants were being treated better by local authorities than local people. Now the Government has been forced to come clean and has admitted that in the last year alone, 200,000 of Britain's social homes - 5% of the total - were given to immigrants allowing them to jump the queue in front of 1.5 million Britons on the housing list. At the end of May the Government published statistics suggesting that just 1% of social housing went to immigrants in order to undermine the BNP campaign to give British families priority in social housing. Now just six weeks later, after an investigation by ITN journalists, it has been forced to admit that the real figures are FIVE TIMES HIGHER!

New leaflet to promote Solidarity Trade Union

THE Solidarity Trade Union has produced a new A5 recruitment leaflet which British National Party members and supporters are asked to distribute at their places of work.

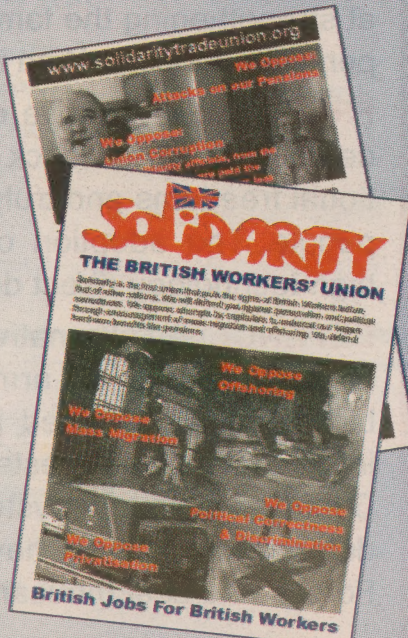

Solidarity is an independent trade union formed as a reaction against the betrayal of the internationalist Unions affiliated to the TUC, many of whom have sold-out their members. Solidarity is the only union that recognises that the true purpose of a union is to defend the rights and jobs of British workers against the globalists. Global big business threatens the jobs of British workers by encouraging mass migration and seeks to offshore British jobs to cheap labour countries. Solidarity understands that the true function of a Union is to represent and promote the interests of its members and British workers in general.

Solidarity encompasses all industrial and service sectors within the economy in one big union and is establishing itself as an independent Trade Union.

For far too long workers have been betrayed by the Marxist-leaning Unions who are only too happy to support mass immigration and EU expansion which they know full well have done nothing but adversely affect the labour force. The vast bulk of Britain's manufacturing base has disappeared, leaving a growing part of the workforce in low paid service industry work, competing for jobs with cheap foreign labour arriving in Britain from Eastern Europe.

If you support the British National Party, then the only trade union for you must be Solidarity!

Blair's final act of betrayal in Brussels

by Steve Johnson

TONY Blair has finished off his premiership in typical style, by selling out our country yet again and all the while trying to spin his betrayal as a 'victory for Britain'.

At the European Union talks in Brussels, Blair gave the Eurocrats all they wanted in terms of breathing back life into the superstate EU Constitution, already rejected once by French and Dutch voters in referenda. Gordon Brown backed this stitch-up by ruling out the British people ever having the chance to make their views felt on the treaty.

Blair agreed to:

■ A European Union President being created to take precedence over the Queen.

■ Britain's foreign policy being governed by a majority vote of other EU countries.

■ The EU having ambassadors to represent it as a sovereign

superstate

■ Our Foreign Secretary responsible to a Eurocrat called "The High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy".

■ Euro Parliament being able to veto the decisions of nation states.

■ Our Government losing its ability to stop Brussels bureaucrats spending the British tax money we pay them how they like.

■ The European Court of Justice getting more powers over our laws and our immigration policy.

■ An EU Army being allowed to encamp on British soil - another step to a commitment to a common defence policy.

The only opt-out Tony Blair insisted on was safeguarding the rights of Labour's Big Business backers by having any reference to the social impact of 'free competition' removed from a protocol to the treaty. That will be worth a few more donations to its campaign fund.

THE REASON: "So let me get this right Tony. You want any reference to the social impact of 'free competition' removed from the treaty so that Big Business keeps bunging money to your Party."

Labour's 2005 Election Manifesto promised the British people a say if all this happened. It promised a referendum if the proposals to erode our sovereignty further in the then proposed European Union constitution re-emerged in any future EU treaty.

But Blair, backed by his successor Brown, has totally reneged on this, proving yet again that the establishment parties' election pledges are simply a pack of cynical lies aimed at conning the voters.

The Government knows perfectly well that the British people would say NO to their EU treaty - so we won't be given the chance. So much for democracy.

Of course, Labour can quite rightly point out that the Tories - now loudly calling for a referendum on this latest Euro-treaty - didn't offer us one when it was their turn to sell-out our country's independence to Brussels with the 1986 Single European Act and the 1992 Maastricht Treaty.

Cutting costs puts our servicemen's lives at risk

by Steve Johnson

A Royal Air Force Nimrod reconnaissance plane crashed near Kandahar in Afghanistan last year after the plane's ageing fuel system sprang a leak and the escaping fuel caught fire.

Thankfully the fault was found, so you would think the Government would make sure it was corrected on all the other Nimrods being sent into the skies over Afghanistan, especially as the planes are currently undergoing refurbishment. But amazingly it isn't, because the Government says it can't afford to.

Last September's crash, in which 14 aircrew died, was the result of a leak in the air-to-air refuelling system. This fault has continued to occur on other RAF Nimrods, one of which recently returned to the Nimrods'

HASTY: This Labour Government was quick enough to send our servicemen to fight its illegal wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

NIMROD: Single skinned fuel pipes put crews at risk.

base at RAF Kinloss in Scotland with seven tons of leaked and highly inflammable aviation fuel sloshing about in its bomb bay.

The Nimrod is an older style aircraft based on the civilian Comet airliner. This was a world-beater when it first flew 55 years ago, but is hardly cutting edge technology now.

The Nimrods are currently rotating through BAe Systems for yet another updating, but this won't include fixing the cause of leaks in the refuelling system. The pipes will remain single-skinned, unlike all modern planes which have double-skinned fuel pipes, nor are there any plans to fit the Nimrods' wing fuel tanks with foam, although that would have prevented the explosion that brought down the Afghan crash Nimrod XV230.

It's a sorry state of affairs that British servicemen died flying a deathtrap which was older than anyone on board it. And it's a scandal that the Ministry of Defence was prepared to risk the loss of a £70 million-plus jet and its crew, rather than spending the money needed to make the fleet safe. So it should come as no surprise that many Nimrod aircrew, fed up with flying in an antique firetrap, are simply quitting the RAF. It's a loss of brave and skilled personnel our country can ill afford.

This Labour Government was quick enough to send our servicemen into danger, fighting its illegal wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, all at a vast cost to the taxpayer. Yet it drags its feet when it comes to finding the necessary funds to upgrade our aircraft to help safeguard the lives of those same servicemen.

Gay lobby targets the classroom

by Louise Scott

TEACHERS should not promote marriage as superior to gay relationships - that's the demand of a vocal gay lobby within the University and College Union. They say that homosexuality must be promoted on an equal footing to prevent the spread of "bigoted" ideas in the classroom.

At the moment, guidelines state that children should be taught the importance of marriage in family life, and teachers are permitted to voice opposition to homosexuality if it is at odds with their personal or religious beliefs, meaning that teachers in religious schools can say that homosexuality is against their religion.

If the union gets its way, however, any opposition to homosexuality would be banned from the classroom. Delegates at the union's conference said that the new laws preventing discrimination against homosexuals did not go far enough and that teachers were still allowed to voice their own opinions on homosexuality. Regulations state that it is illegal to categorise homosexual relationships as inferior to heterosexual ones, but the Union says that there is nothing to prevent teachers proclaiming the "superiority" of heterosexual marriage.

Parents however just want the traditional lifestyle of the majority population reflected in teaching. Children should learn fundamental values and not be subjected to "trendy" mindbending propaganda bent on promoting homosexuality.

Muslim students boycott Government sponsored Islamic studies courses

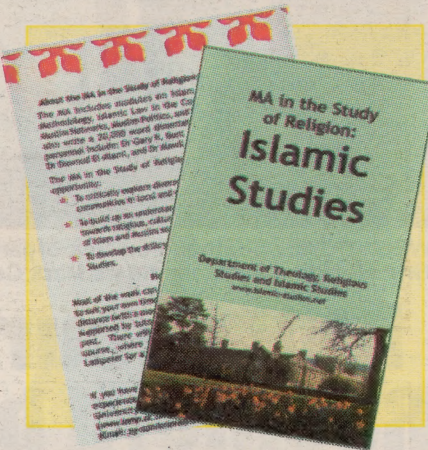

ISLAMIC studies courses taught in Britain's universities have now been designated a "strategic subject" by the Department of Education because of their role "in preventing extremism".

A strategic subject is one where it is in the national interest for graduates to acquire the right knowledge and skills, and Islamic studies joins science and engineering, the other subjects that are designated strategic subjects.

Islamic studies now get increased Government funding with an extra £1million being invested in the training of imams and promotion of the courses. Higher Education Minister Bill Rammell explained the reason for the elevation of the study of Islam in Britain's universities.

"The effective and accurate delivery of Islamic studies within our universities is important for a multitude of reasons including wider community cohesion and preventing violent extremism in the name of Islam," he said.

There are 44 higher education courses with Islamic studies in the title being taught but the Department of Education refused to disclose how many people were studying Islam at university.

But Islamic studies courses are being boycotted by many Muslim students who say the lectures are more about promoting multi-culturalism in Britain than understanding Islam.

Faisal Hanjra of the Federation of Student Islamic Societies said:

"The vast majority of Muslims don't learn their Islam from universities; they learn it from the imams in their local communities."

Flaw found in crime statistics

HOME Office figures show that violent crime is going down and according to the British Crime Survey, violent crime is meant to have dropped by almost half over the last decade.

But those who live in Britain's inner city areas say the Government figures are nonsense and that crime is out of control. And they may just be right after a recent review into how the crime statistics are compiled uncovered a fundamental flaw in how the information was gathered.

EXCLUDED: Killings in south London because the victims were under 16.

Professor Adrian Smith who headed the review into crime figures, reported that there was an issue of what exactly is measured and that one of the major omissions of the British Crime Survey was the exclusion of crimes involving those under the age of sixteen.

In many communities where residents feel besieged in their homes because the neighbourhood is too violent and threatening to venture out into, many of those marauding the streets are out of control youths too young for their crimes to be recorded.

Cost of foreign inmates

KEEPING foreign criminals in prison is costing the British taxpayer £398 million a year.

More than 12,000 prisoners - that's one-in-six - are foreigners, with a quarter of these coming from Jamaica and Nigeria.

There are 164 different nationalities in the jails, many coming from countries which are classed as safe for the criminals to be deported back to, yet the Government allows them stay on to serve their sentences here at our expense.

Mental Health: Witch-hunt for 'racism' draws a blank

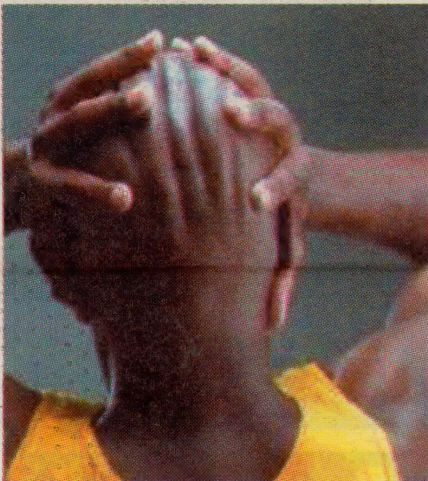

by Tina Wingfield

THE disproportionate numbers of Blacks and Asians in mental health services is not, after all, the consequence of 'institutionalised racism', according to a new report by the Institute of Psychiatry in London.

Researchers carrying out the largest ever study of psychosis tested the claim that psychiatrists were discriminating against black patients. They found that, even when the ethnicity of the patient was unknown, psychosis was still diagnosed nine times more often in black people: almost exactly the same rate as their presence within mental health services.

The study has, according to Professor Robin Murray from the Institute, shown that misdiagnosis, supposedly resulting from 'institutionalised racism', is a myth. On the contrary, "psychiatrists in the UK are less likely to diagnose psychosis in somebody who is black than white with the same symptoms".

This new research turns on its head the widely publicised findings of an official inquiry into the treatment of black people within Britain's mental health services in 2004, which concluded that the system was riddled with institutional racism.

The fall-out from this inquiry was intense, with politicians from all the Westminster parties taking their turn to denounce the 'racism' inherent in mental health service provision. Commenting on statistics showing that young Afro Caribbean men were eighteen times more likely than their white contemporaries to be diagnosed with psychotic illness, the Minister for Health, Rosie Winterton, concluded that this "lack of equality was a form of racism that had to be eliminated."

The furore prompted the Government to launch a five-year witch-hunt called the 'anti-discriminatory project', to root out discrimination in NHS mental health services. In addition to the funding of 80 new community projects to tackle discrimination, 500 ethnic minority community development workers were appointed and a compulsory programme of 'diversity' training for NHS staff initiated.

Now that this latest study has revealed the real reason why black people are disproportionately represented within the mental health services - quite simply, because they suffer from higher levels of mental illness - it would be reasonable to assume that the service can now be released from the binds of political correctness which prevent it from even recognising, let alone dealing with the issue.

Then again, there seems to be no place for reason in today's topsy-turvy multi-culti reality. Some truths are just too unpalatable for the PC zealots to swallow!

Rise in cannabis-induced mental health problems

MINISTER for Health, Rosie Winterton - currently engaged in a McCarthyist campaign to purge the mental health service of its 'institutional racism' - would benefit from a little rest from her root for 'racists under the bed', to examine the latest figures on cannabis-induced mental illness.

There has been an 85% increase in mental health hospital admissions due to cannabis use since 1997. This includes people with a chronic addiction to cannabis, acute cannabis psychosis and cannabis-related schizophrenia.

These figures confirm what mental health experts have been telling the Labour Government all along - that cannabis is a dangerous substance that merits classification as a Class B drug. But ignorance, coupled with its insistence on wasting limited resources chasing demons, has diverted attention away from the real causes underlying the high incidence of mental illness in the black community.

Given the high levels of cannabis use within this ethnic group, re-classifying cannabis as a Class B drug and ditching the current 'softy-softy' law enforcement approach to its use will help address this growing problem.

Special facilities

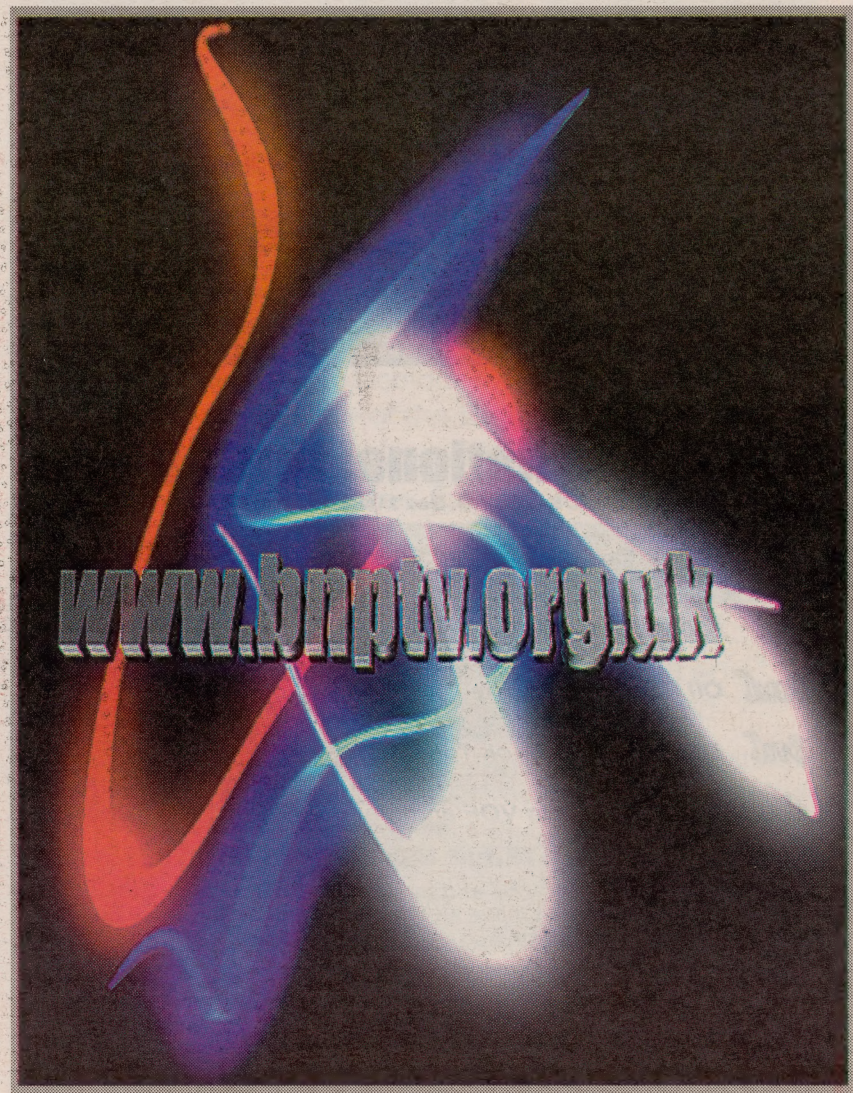

THE Muslim Council of Britain (MCB) wants special facilities provided for Muslim pupils in schools. In new guidelines issued for schools, the MCB says it wants separate changing rooms for sports, single sex classes for sex education, prayer rooms, new rights to Islamic worship, and different uniform rules.

The guidelines also propose that boys should be allowed to grow beards for religious reasons.

Schools facing migrant burden

THE number of children of migrant workers attending Fenland schools has doubled in the last year.

The influx is placing a huge burden on headteachers who need to provide additional teaching for the pupils, mostly from Eastern Europe. Many children arrive with little or no previous experience of schooling and an increasing number have been identified as having additional learning needs.

BNP secures 30% in Rochford by-election

THE BRITISH National Party Organisation in Rochford is under the control of its parent group which is Southend BNP.

In May, Rochford BNP took its first foray into local elections when Bob Green was the candidate in the Hullbridge ward for Rochford District Council. He came second to the Conservatives with 472 votes, which was 25.2 % of the vote, and beat both the Labour Party and the Greens.

When a by-election came up in Hockley North, local activists were keen to contest it to see if they could

by Tony Shell

IT IS with great sadness we report the death of Major Robert 'Robbie' Perkins at the age of 53.

Although born in Salisbury, Robert was an old 'Plymothian', having moved here in 1954, and often reflected with great fondness on spending his childhood years growing up in our beautiful city.

In 1973 he joined the army (REME) as a private, and in the subsequent 28 years worked his way up through the ranks - eventually retiring as a Major. He served his country - with immense pride, dedication and distinction - in Belize, Hong Kong, Singapore, Northern Ireland, Germany, the Gulf (Desert Storm) and in Bosnia (two tours). On many occasions he operated in regions of bitter conflict, placing his own life on the line to help and protect both colleagues and civilians. Towards the end of his career Robbie served as an instructor at the Officers Training College, Sandhurst.

Robbie really enjoyed army life. He took great pride in being, for a time, Army Squash Champion, and was also a member of the Victory Services Club (London).

Sadly the experiences of these conflicts (of Bosnia in particular) left their mark on Robbie. He was witness to acts of such inhumanity and savagery that as a result he suffered the horrors of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). This was compounded by the harsh physical effects of a long army service and Robbie had to endure almost constant pain from arthritis.

In 2006 Robbie joined the British National Party and was very proud to become the organiser for the British National Party in Plymouth. He was a true patriot and would often simply respond, when being challenged regarding his role within the BNP that "it is because I love my country".

We will recall many of the qualities that made Robbie such good company and a valued friend: his complete generosity towards others, his self-effacing modesty and lack of vanity or pomposity; a delightful sense of humour; his unselfishness; and his stoicism under the most testing of circumstances.

We will never forget his love for this country, or his passion for working for a better future.

Robbie, we will miss you.

A day of action in Whitby

by Louise Scott

ACTIVISTS from Scarborough, Teesside, York and Bridlington BNP Groups held a Day of Action in the popular North Yorkshire seaside resort of Whitby.

The event was well-attended, and the keen group of activists were organised into small teams, some manning BNP stalls, some selling Freedom and others leafleting around the town. Scarborough BNP had designed a special leaflet for the occasion and many were delivered on two nearby housing estates.

The stalls also offered members of the public the chance to obtain BNP national leaflets in order to learn more about what the Party stands for.

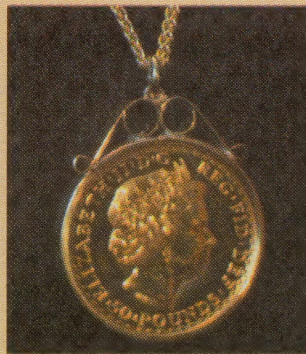

It was an excellent activity which really promoted the British National Party in Whitby and even intervention from the weather with heavy rain, thunder and lightning, couldn't dampen the spirits of our dedicated team of activists

Scarborough fundraiser proves a big hit

STICKER: For collecting tins.

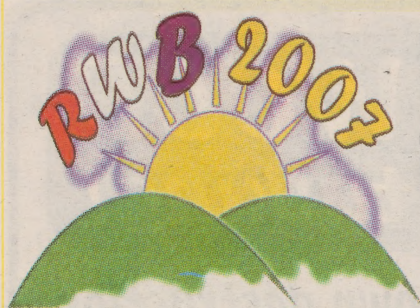

ONE of Scarborough BNP's money-raising ideas is a version of the tried and tested method of saving in a piggy bank.

To remind members, a sticker and slogan have been produced to fix to a money box, collecting tin or just an ordinary jam jar!

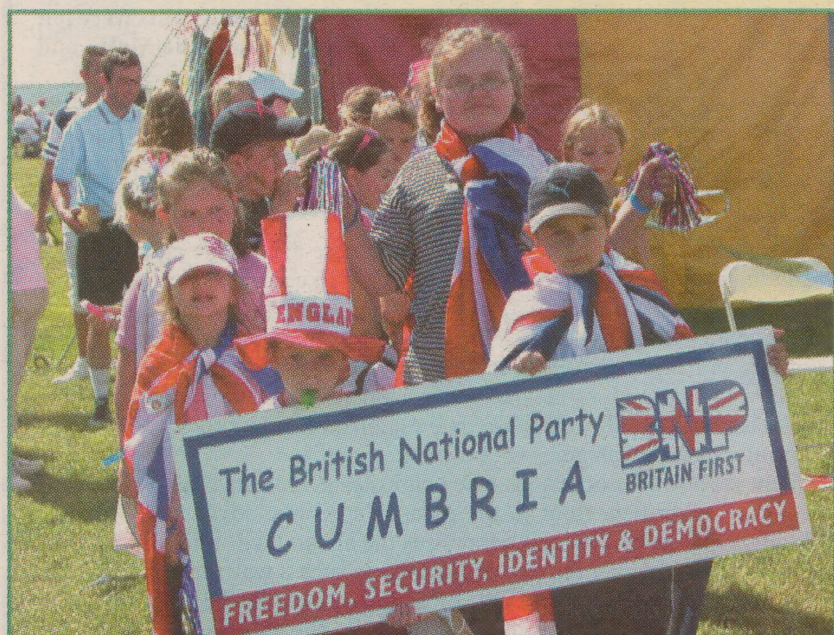

The slogan "Pennies to Power" is superimposed over the Union Flag, and since introducing the scheme, the Scarborough Group has raised over £100 towards election expenses and group funds.

The stickers come in batches of 200 and cost £5.50 (which includes postage and packing). Any group or Branch interested in these fun and effective money-raising stickers should contact Scarborough BNP at: The Secretary, PO Box 430, Scarborough YO11 9BN. Children in for a treat at this year's Red, White & Blue Family Festival

CHILDREN'S PARADE: As the RWB draws to a close, it's the children that take centre stage with their own special parade. This year will be an even more eye-catching event with many children in fancy dress.

NEW FOR 2007: A Big Wheel and Dodgem Cars will help provide the fun.

THE British National Party's annual Red, White & Blue Family Festival is all about the children and this year's event will be the best ever for the youngsters. The children of today's members and supporters will be the future of our Party and there is no better way of familiarising them with the patriotic ideals and family values of the BNP, than attending the RWB. Getting the younger ones involved and keeping their interest over the two days is the job of Debbie Stafford. She is the wife of Allerdale (Cumbria) BNP organiser Paul, and has run the children's tent at the RWB for the past three years. Last month Debbie was elected to Wigton Town Council, a fitting reward for her tireless work with youngsters within the community. "There's lots more going on at this year's RWB and to make some of the activities successful we do need an input from the parents," Debbie told Freedom. "The high spot on the Sunday is always the Children's Parade, but this year before the event, there will

Maritime boost for Copeland BNP Over 100 *Freedom*s sold at Whitehaven pageant

THE fifth Whitehaven maritime pageant attracted a crowd of over 350,000 for the festivities which stretched over three days for the first time in its history.

It provided an ideal opportunity for the newly-formed Copeland BNP group to set out its stall in the town, and that is exactly what they did. Copeland BNP organiser Clive Jefferson, and fundholder Bill Pugh, with the help of local activists, sold over 100 copies of Freedom and collected the names and addresses of fifty people who wanted to attend the next meeting in the town.

"We got off to a bit of a false start when we set up stall actually on the harbour," Clive told Freedom.

"The festival organisers said we needed a special licence and it was too late for the paperwork to be submitted. So we just moved 20 yards down the road and still had a poll position for the crowds arriving. The police arrived as well but everyone was very friendly and we were able to sell our newspapers without any problems."

The British National Party's papersale and stall got a mention in the Whitehaven

News the following week.

The area of West Cumbria covered by the Copeland parliamentary constituency includes the Sellafield nuclear complex with many of the workers living locally. There's a lot of support for the BNP within the plant and despite threats from both management and the unions an increasing number within the workforce have joined the Party. The British National Party came to the fore in Whitehaven with its special leaflet opposing the plans to build a mosque in the town. Residents had contacted the BNP after Labour and Tory politicians in the town said that the mosque would be built despite the opposition of local people.

CLIVE JEFFERSON: The Copeland organiser was pleased with the response to the BNP stall.

WHITEHAVEN: The BNP stall was opposite the harbour entrance.

LABOUR'S LEGACY: Factory after factory has been allowed to close, as British manufactured goods have been undercut by cheap Chinese imports. British jobs have been lost and lives of British workers have been ruined.

Brown's ten years on the road to ruin

by Steve Johnson

GORDON Brown's coronation as Prime Minister is being spun as a fitting reward for ten years of successfully running the national economy. The truth could not be more different.

Actual figures hidden behind the spin reveal the disastrous legacy of Brown's decade as Chancellor - the destruction of the manufacturing industrial bedrock of the British economy.

When Brown moved into No. 11 in 1997, the New Labour manifesto pledged to "strengthen and expand Britain's industrial base". The reality is that for the past ten years that base has stagnated in terms of total output and shrunk to less than 15% of the national economy - its smallest share for over 200 years - and nearly 1,250,000 jobs in manufacturing have been lost.

Britain, once the Workshop of the World, is now dependent on foreign imports for manufactured goods, running up an ever growing trade deficit in the process. For centuries Britain exported far more manufactured goods than she imported, our manufacturing exports were the foundation of the nation's prosperity. Then the Conservatives under Maggie Thatcher took their 'free market' axe to our industry and by 1983, for the first time in history, Britain recorded a trade deficit in manufactured goods and it has been the same ever since.

By the time the Tories had done their wrecking work, "selling off the family silver" as Harold Macmillan described it, the manufacturing trade deficit in 1997 was running at £7 billion a year. Then Gordon Brown got his hands on our economic levers of power and after ten years of him in charge the annual trade deficit in manufacturing goods had ballooned by last year to £59 billion! Factory after factory had been allowed to close, undercut by cheap Chinese imports. Job after job lost, life after life ruined.

Labour, like the Tories before them, tried to blame the victims, claiming our industries were inefficient and our workforce lazy. Again, the figures expose Labour's lies. Over the past ten years, thanks to the efforts of its workers rather than any help from the Government, output per worker in British manufacturing has gone up by 50%, but still New Labour has stood by and let cheap imports wreck British manufacturing.

Brown's line is that this doesn't matter because the massive and growing trade deficit is matched by huge capital inflows as Russian mafia ganglords and Indian sweatshop bosses buy up Britain. Spivs and slickers in the City have never had it so good, coining bumper bonuses for buying and selling bits of paper whilst West Midlands industrial craftsmen who made real things look forward to a future rotting on the dole.

"This Government is shutting down our ability to produce real things of real value in favour of meaningless and unproductive paper-juggling."

This Government is shutting down our ability to produce real things of real value - engines, cars, tractors, ships, aircraft, computers, machines, in favour of meaningless and unproductive paper-juggling, futures trades and currency speculations. A vast bubble of nothing that the slightest global stocks and shares shudder will cause to pop, leaving us with nothing.

Brown's economic legacy is illusory. Just like the prosperity of a householder whose shiny new gadgets, giant plasma-screen TV in the living room and new car in the drive are only paid for by running up massive loan debts and cashing in the equity on the bricks and mortar that is their only real financial asset. Once the plastic can no longer be juggled and credit ratings take a dive, round will come the bailiffs and family after family will be out on the streets.

That is the reality of ten years of Gordon Brown's economic management. Built on foundations laid by Margaret Thatcher and the Tories to lead Britain along the road to economic ruin.

Nothing can be spared from the march of multiculturalism

by Jill Morrison

ON Sunday evening on BBC 1 there's a programme that takes a look at a rapidly disappearing slice of Britain. It is where women bake fruitcakes and arrange flowers and their menfolk grow vegetables, all in good natured competition to be judged at the local village shows.

The Great British Village Show is presented by Alan Titchmarsh, James Martin and Angellica Bell, who visit shows in different parts of the country, picking winners of 15 different categories ranging from tallest sunflower to longest carrot.

VILLAGE FAIR: Disappearing.

The programme has irritated those on the Left of British politics because it is 'harping back' to a Britain they don't like to think about, "all White and cosy" was how the New Statesman described it.

For those of us who are still clinging on to the memories of a Britain into which we were born, but which has now changed beyond recognition during our lifetime, the BBC's programme is also a little irritating. The New Statesman is quite right that the garden fetes and village and county shows are the last bastion of traditional White Britain, so for traditional White Britons it was disappointing that the BBC chose Angellica Bell to front the programme.

Please don't get me wrong, Angellica has a lovely smile, speaks clearly and is an accomplished presenter, but she is just not my choice for a programme like this.

I suppose I was hoping to enjoy a little piece of culture that was still free of the march of the multi-culti brigade who have stampeded through traditional Britain over the past thirty years. I was hoping to be able to step back into my childhood recollections and do so free from any reminders of the demographic change that has befallen these islands.

Sadly that wasn't to be and, of course, the BBC couldn't allow it to be any other way. Not a minute of the day must be allowed to pass when it is not instilled into the indigenous population that things have changed and that we now live in a multicultural society.

SALLY WOOD Straight talking!

Welcoming their own destruction

FOR three days last month a group of African migrants were left clinging to fishing nets in the Mediterranean while Malta and Libya argued over whose territorial waters they occupied.

Malta was slammed by the international community for wrangling whilst lives were put at risk, but who can blame them? Since it joined the European Union, seven thousand migrants have arrived by boat on the small island of Malta which is only 24 miles long and already houses an indigenous population of 400,000.

As a resident put it to the BBC: "The Maltese are an ageing population and the immigrants are young and breeding like rabbits. Yet still we are supposed to take them in, care for them and let them live amongst us."

For me it is the equivalent of the red squirrel welcoming the grey to these shores and offering to share its winter store of nuts to see it through. Such an act would, of course, never happen within the animal kingdom as behavioural traits do not become established unless they confer some evolutionary advantage.

There are however occasions when parasites invade the brains of animals and alter their behaviour to the parasite's genetic advantage. Take for example the lancet fluke: it parasitizes the ant and will find its way to its host's brain and alter the ant's behaviour in such a way that in the cool of the evening it will climb a blade of grass and cling to the top until a cow comes along and munches it.

But there is no mind altering parasite lurking in the brains of the Maltese population. They have simply been indoctrinated to behave in a way that puts their own genetic survival at risk. They have been brainwashed into continuing their welcoming programme even though this action will one day turn Malta into an island that is no longer Maltese.

It is a microcosm of what is happening in the world as a whole. The tragedy that is befalling this small island in the Mediterranean could be coming, in the not too distant future, to an island much nearer home.

MALTESE CROSS: An African burden landing on the island's shores.

Cracking the BBC's special code

RECENTLY on the BBC Radio 4's PM programme Dr Marion McAvooy, was interviewed by Eddie Mair regarding the fact that several children at the Southfields Junior School in Luton had tested positive to tuberculosis.

The decision was taken to test the remainder of the pupils at the school, numbering 250 in total for the disease and Dr McAvooy was asked by Eddie Mair to describe the make-up of the children at the school and was informed that the children were "delightful".

What a strange reply and this immediately led me to believe that this was not a school with a large white intake of pupils. Whenever staff of more traditionally British schools are interviewed they wouldn't dream of describing their pupils in such a way. On being asked they tend to talk in terms of 'a working class catchment area' or 'generally from a middle class area'. They most certainly would not confer on their pupils a quality of "delightful" - it is a description which just wouldn't be used for ordinary British schoolchildren.

Eddie Mair then questioned Dr McAvooy on why there appears to be pockets of TB in the country and why Luton appears to be one such pocket. He asked her to explain what causes these pockets. He was informed that the disease tends to occur in communities which are mobile and vibrant and that Luton is such a community.

So there we have it: mobility and vibrancy can lead to TB. I just wonder why I was not informed of this risk as a child. Just think of all those times I went out wearing brightly coloured clothes and visiting places of interest around the country that I could have run the risk of TB infection!

The entire interview was carried out by the BBC without once using the word 'immigrant'. It seems that a code has to be used lest the general listener should make a dangerous connection between immigration and disease and take a less than welcoming view of the Third World masses now settling in our country.

BBC CODE: To distance the TB outbreak from immigrants.

Labour's backing 'modern' slavery

by Rodd Elliott

TONY Blair and John Prescott might have fallen over themselves earlier this year to apologise for slavery, but the Labour Government, now under Gordon Brown, is playing its part in reinventing slavery for the modern era.

Our new Chinese slaves might live and work at the other side of the world, but that does not make them any less victims of slavery.

I visited Primark recently for a pair of office trousers, and was astounded to find them marked at £4. This wasn't a special offer nor a loss leader, just a standard rack of trousers.

Now this is just one hour's labour at the minimum wage, for which our new Chinese slaves need to source the raw material, spin the yarn, weave the cloth, cut and sew the garment, ship it to Europe and for Primark to slap a 100% mark-up on it.

CHINA: A pair of trousers made for £2.

Importing Chinese manufactured goods is promoting slavery in China, however, this is slavery with a twist, for we have no direct control over our slaves. So when their Chinese masters gain a monopoly of supply in most of the key areas of modern need, which they already have done in many fields of production, they can charge what they like for their goods. A £2 pair of trousers rises to £20, or more importantly that £2 computer chip spirals to £20.

This will cause our already hopeless trade-deficit to balloon to epic proportions because Britain now produces no trousers nor chips of her own, or any other similar products.

Labour and Tory politicians who have championed our evolution into a post-industrial service industry nation, will lose credibility as voters find life without consumer goods rather unappealing.

180 fishing boats

THE European Union is buying up British fishermen at the rate of 2 or 3 per month in order to dry dock their boats and sell their licences to Spanish fishermen.

Our historic island nation now has just 180 fishing boats left.

It's a deliberate policy and one that has been in place since Edward Heath betrayed Britain in 1972, surrendering our fishing grounds to get us into the then Common Market.

END OF AN ERA: The McCain Stadium, the last home of Scarborough FC.

Scarborough's demise is a sad day for football

by Louise Scott

SCARBOROUGH FC, one of the oldest football clubs in England, has folded after a judge at a Leeds Crown Court wound up the debt-ridden club.

Scarborough FC was founded in 1879 and played its early games at the local cricket club's ground. It was originally known as Scarborough Cricketers FC, as the team was made up of cricketers from the town, but became known as just Scarborough Football Club in 1898.

The team had several minor successes in the 1970s, when they won the FA Trophy three times and finished as runners-up once.

Scarborough was a non-league side until 1987, when it became the first team ever to win automatic promotion from the then Vauxhall Conference into Division Four. The club wastwice involved in play-offs but never managed to gain promotion within the Football League.

In 1999, the team was relegated back to the Conference and from there it was a downward slope. In 2006 they were relegated into the Conference North and last season finished second to bottom of that league and were relegated again, this time to the Northern Premier League.

But Scarborough FC had also run-up debts of £2million and the proposed rescue package for the club involved selling off their McCain Stadium to pay its creditors. However this was always a non-starter because of a covenant on the ground which restricted its use to sport and not for development or the building of houses.

It is a very sad day for Scarborough, for football and football supporters in general. As the Premiership clubs get richer and richer, paying obscene wages and transfer fees for foreign players, Britain's smaller grass-roots clubs are left to go to the wall.

ALWOODLEY: The distinctive 17th century crofter's cottage in Kings Lane before and after the bulldozers had done their work.

400 year-old crofter's cottage bulldozed by Leeds Council

THE bulldozing of an ancient crofter's cottage in Alwoodley, north Leeds has been described as "a monstrous act of vandalism" by local historians.

The 17th century tiny Yorkshire stone cottage on King Lane was remarkable for its distinctively tall chimney and the fact that it had survived close to the junction of Stairfoot Lane for more than 400 years.

Leeds City Council demolished the crofter's cottage along with a modern bungalow built alongside it to make way for a development.

Steve Burt, a local historian and author of the book 'An Illustrated History of Alwoodley', condemned the council's actions.

"It was a unique structure. In essence it was one of the oldest crofters' cottages for that area and a reminder of the poor farmers who grew oats and herded sheep on moorland owned by the Lane-Fox family of Bramham." Demolition of the cottage was approved by Leeds City Council in March, who said that the usual period of public consultation was given without a recorded objection.

It is all rather depressing that the protection of this unique part of British history was left solely down to the public and that Leeds Council itself were not able to safeguard the future of the cottage.

Change, but no change!

A resignation hints at something new
A novel broom to brush the dross away;
New name, new man, new emphases untried
But underneath, the script remains the same:

The same perverted, worn-out, failed ideas,
The same old selfish policies, inept,
The same refusal to accept the truth,
The same old disregard for Britain's fate.

So no real progress shakes the static scene
These politicians have it all sewn up;
In fact, they only care about themselves,
But seek with empty words to dress this up.

Our listless people flounder in the mire
Of hopelessness, confusion and despair,
While feckless rulers lewdly live it up,
Deceiving us, by spouting rank, hot air.

To them, it is a well known, standing joke -
The three main parties, different, but the same!
A change of leader signifies no change -
It's but another facet of their game,

That hoax, maintained to keep us all on board
By letting us believe we have a say,
When truly, nothing's further from the truth
It's just the favoured Few who have their way!

And only when this nation's seen the light
That's shining from our Party, brave and true,
Will changes for the better and the best
Reflect a really new, illumined view!

Teachers betrayed

ABERDEEN in Scotland has a teacher shortage and the Central Belt Area of Scotland has a huge surplus of teachers.

You would have thought that Aberdeen Council would recruit Scottish Teachers from the Central Belt Area who need jobs, and whose training is of a high standard, but the Home Office in Scotland has placed teaching on its list for emergency recruitment from outside the UK.

So Aberdeenshire Council's remedy for more teachers is to go to countries like Poland, Australia and Canada to hunt for new teachers.

Now call me cynical but why are they overlooking qualified Scottish teachers a short trip down the road in the Central Belt and going to places like Poland?

Something to do with the massive influx of Polish school kids in the North East of Scotland requiring Polish speaking teachers, maybe?

This is a sad story of betrayal of Scottish teachers. This displacement of Scottish citizens is something akin to the Highland Clearances, the only difference being the displaced Scots are being replaced by foreign nationals who the SNP, Labour, the Tories and the Lib-Dems call 'New Scots'.

Hopefully the good people of the North East of Scotland will put their faith in a political party that would put the rights, and jobs of indigenous Scottish people first. That is the British National Party.

Steven Thomson, Aberdeen.

Black and Asian faces

IAM so pleased to read in your newspaper that there are others like myself who are irritated by the increasing number of Black and Asians presenting programmes on our television.

According to the last census figures, Britain is still a country which has a population that is 90% White. So why is it that the number of ethnic minorities reading the news, giving the weather or reporting for news programmes vastly exceeds the 10%, it should be if it reflected the make-up of our population?

As one of the editors of BBC News admitted recently, flooding our screens with Black and Asian faces is a deliberate policy. The reason behind this policy is to make us believe that the country is more 'diverse' than it really is, so to weaken our resolve to resist this change.

Jessica Rowntree, Reigate.

Forced integration

THE education watchdog Ofsted has heavily criticised Labour's £20m flagship school, South Leeds High, for the behaviour of its pupils.

The 1,400-pupil school also has some of the worst truancy and GCSE exam pass rates in the country.

This is no surprise to those of us who opposed the merger of Merlyn Rees Community High in Belle Isle and Matthew Murray High in Holbeck by the local education authority.

None of the parents of children at Merlyn Rees, which was mainly a White school, wanted to see it combined with Matthew Murray, which was predominantly Asian, warning that it was a recipe for disaster. And that is what it has turned out to be with riot police called out on many occasions to quell mass brawls on the Belle Isle site between White and Asian pupils.

This sort of forced integration just doesn't work. Our children's education suffers and White families feel even more aggrieved that their country is being taken away from them.

Postal vote fraud

READING about postal vote fraud in Freedom reminded me of a conversation I had just before the elections in May.

My postal voting papers arrived while my carer was here, and she said: "Oh yes, Mrs Davies (the client she had visited before me) got hers this morning but she never bothers to vote. She asked me to put the papers in the recycling bin for her, along with some junk mail. Most of my elderly clients throw their postal votes away."

Now a more unscrupulous carer might actually take these postal ballots and send them in marked with their own preferred choice of candidate, having forged the client's signature, to which they have plenty of access.

With over half of the electorate not bothering to vote at local elections and with old folks homes and sheltered housing awash with ballot papers, I think that there needs to be a way of ensuring that those who never vote are not sent ballot papers.

Belinda Robson, email.

Enoch was right

I WASN'T surprised to read that Polish immigrants have set up a Polish food shop in Wrexham.

After all, what is to be expected when Britain is the only EU member to open its doors to so many Polish workers.

This Government is responsible for creating racial discord in places where none existed before, because British men and women are being put out of work by this influx of cheap labour from Eastern Europe and beyond.

And not all these migrants are looking for work, many are just here to enjoy a life on the benefits that the British people have paid in for.

This current immigration fiasco has prompted tension within our otherwise tolerant population. As gangs of Black and Asian youngsters battle each other for control of the drugs trade on our nation's streets, Enoch Powell's prophecy of 'Rivers of Blood' take on greater significance as each day passes.

R. J. Parton, Bristol.

Military hospitals

FOR every death you hear about in Iraq or Afghanistan there are countless more casualties that never get reported on the news.

These injured soldiers are brought back to the UK and put in ordinary NHS hospitals, often away from their friends and family. They are often on their own, in wards with civilian patients who have no concept of the environment they have just come from.

There is a petition on the Downing Street website asking the Government to bring back dedicated military hospitals so that injured soldiers can be cared for in a safe and dignified environment with staff and fellow patients who understand about battlefield casualties.

I hope all Freedom's readers sign it.

James Spencer, Great Yarmouth.

London's logo

LIKE most people, my initial reaction to the hideous new London 2012 Olympics logo was one of derision and scorn, followed by disgust over the bucketloads of public cash wasted on it.

However, upon further reflection, I'm beginning to think we critics have been a little harsh. The design appears to be made up of pieces of a whole - once complete, but now fractured, divided and broken.

What could be more appropriate to symbolize today's modern, multicultural London?

Cllr Julian Leppert, Loughton.

Exclusive to British National Party members

BUSINESS IN: The usual Labour suspects and union bullies descended on the Wiltshire town of Corsham.

Former RAF policeman takes his seat for the BNP

Michael Simpkins

LABOUR and Liberal Democrat councillors led a demonstration outside Corsham Town Hall as Michael Simpkins, a 47 year-old British National Party councillor, took his seat for the Rudlow ward of Corsham Town council.

The British National Party polled 700 votes in the town at the local elections in May which was 13% of the votes cast. It was a level of support which the Prospective Conservative MP Wilfred Jones, described as "a wake-up call to everyone."

As he arrived for the meeting, Mr Simpkins, a former Royal Air Force policeman, told the BBC:

"I joined the British National Party three years ago, prompted by the promotion of Islam at my son's school and the total lack of concern shown by the other political parties about this attempted brainwashing.

"I am a Christian and a concerned British citizen. I don't want another religion pushed upon our children and I don't want this country to become an Islamic state."

There were few local people in the protest who were mostly outsiders from the South West Regional Labour Party, South West Trades Union Congress, National Union of Journalists, National Union of Teachers, Bristol Asylum Seekers Rights Group, Respect and the Socialist Workers Party.

The media were there in force with all the necessary props to sensationalise their coverage. A vehicle operated by Harlech Television carried its own supply of anti-BNP hate literature, presumably to manufacture some news by passing out a few to shoppers in order to obtain a bit of footage to accompany its evening news report.

Some welcome commonsense on the matter from within the pages of the Western Daily Press.

... it's not the done thing to be party political on Corsham Town Council, so the chances are Councillor Mick Simpkins will never get to spout BNP views at a meeting of the finance and general purposes committee, or maybe the Summer Fete working group.

I'm not sure the BNP has a policy on the imposition of unpopular parking charges by North Wiltshire District Council in market towns like Corsham. But Mick Simpkins probably has a personal view, and one that now, given that he put his name forward, he is entitled to provide.

The fact is that he stood for election in the Rudloe ward, and no one else did. Those hollering demonstrators from Corsham should actually be ashamed of themselves for their apathy... They might be entitled to stand up to declare that Corsham isn't the kind of town people might think it is for having a British National Party councillor, but they are quite wrong to try to pressure a democratically non-elected councillor to stand down.

MEDIA BIAS?: Anti-BNP leaflets on board the Harlech television van.

NEVILLE SAVEALL: Polled 13.2% of the vote in Burnham-on-Crouch.

BNP beat Lib-Dems in Maldon

THE British National Party continued to sink local roots in Maldon in Essex with another solid performance in a local district election.

Neville Saveall polled 178 votes (13.2%) and beat the Liberal Democrats in an election in Burnham-on-Crouch on June 7th.

This follows on from BNP candidates polling 21% of the vote in Southminster and 17.7% in Althorne Ward in elections for the same council in May.

The Party already has three parish councillors in Maldon.

THOSE who dismiss the BNP as a party that only thrives on council estates in London and the North will be surprised that it can attract over 200 votes in affluent Sussex.

Petworth and its surrounding villages is at the very heart of Sussex and the fact that BNP candidate Dr Andrew Emerson was able to claim 10% of the vote shows the broadening appeal of the British National Party.

Delayed Summer School a sell-out!

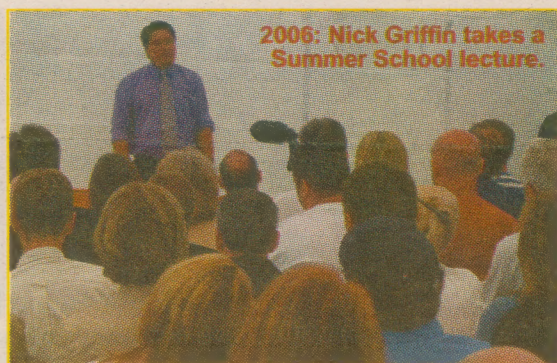

THE British National Party's Summer Training School had to be put back four weeks because of the awful weather in the East Midlands.

The event was still fully booked with tickets snapped up in record time and such was the demand that a reserve list was drawn up in case of any delegates dropping out.

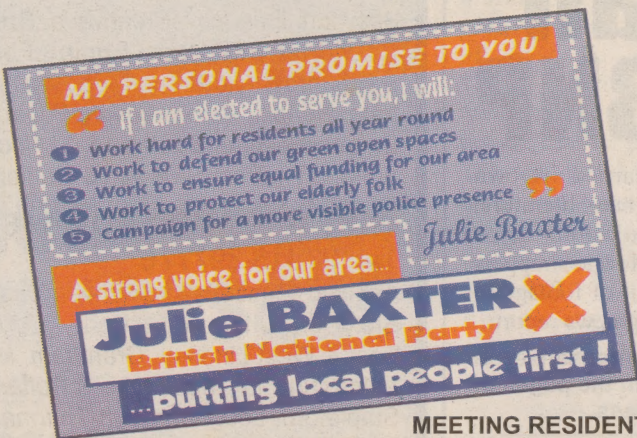

Group Development Officer Sadie Graham, was delighted with the response: "This take-up shows the tremendous progress the Party is making with over half of those attending being recent recruits. They are the newly appointed fundholders and organisers of brand new units from Devon to Scotland. It's a great indication of their enthusiasm to equip themselves with the necessary skills and knowledge to win elections in their areas", she said.

Sadly, the Party has outgrown the beautiful site in rural Nottinghamshire that it has used for the past two years, so in 2008 there will not only be a new venue but the Summer School will be split into Entry Level and Advanced Level sessions held over two different weekends.

BNP are battling back in Halifax

IT HAS been a difficult time for the British National Party in Halifax over the past few years.

There has been a series of desperate near-misses in local elections, with the last just four months ago when Tom Bates polled 1034 votes (36%) in Illingworth & Mixenden Ward and was just 70 votes short of victory.

Two BNP councillors have lost their seats, leaving the Party with just one councillor now on Calderdale Council and on top of this, personality clashes within the local branch, a nasty anti-BNP media campaign and generally disappointing results in May had left activists a shade demoralised.

But thankfully a good campaign in the delayed council election in Warley ward has given the branch a much needed boost.

Excellent candidate Julie Baxter, polled 11.7% and was just 84 votes short of taking second place from the Tories.

"We were very pleased with our election literature and the response we got on the doorstep," a spokesman from Halifax BNP told Freedom.

"Everyone worked hard for this result and it has helped put the branch back on track. We were disappointed in the turnout which was down on previous years, and this without a doubt affected our vote.

"We did beat Labour and the English Democrats despite both parties putting up high profile candidates. Iyas Najib is the son of a Labour councillor, and the father of the English Democrat candidate was a former Conservative councillor."

Beating UKIP in its own backyard

STANDING IN TORBAY: British National Party candidates Chris Marchant, Maureen Turner and veteran BNP campaigner Micheal Turner.

WHEN Mike Turner was due to stand for the British National Party in May's local elections for Torbay Council in Berry Head and Furzedown he had 7 opponents - 3 Conservatives, 3 Liberal Democrats and a Labour candidate for the vacant three seats.

Due to the death of one of the candidates, the election was postponed and when the new contest was called there were no less than 19 hopefuls standing for election. (Con 3, Lab 3, Lib-Dems 3, UKIP 3, BNP 3, Ind 4.)

"We heard that UKIP were putting up a full slate to try to spike our campaign, so my wife and Chris Marchant agreed to stand alongside me," Mike Turner told Freedom. "Before the original contest was postponed, our campaign had been going well, so we were disappointed that the goalposts were so dramatically moved for the second contest."

On polling day two of the four Independent candidates, who appeared from nowhere, romped home taking two Conservative seats, leaving David Cameron's new pink Tories hanging on to a sole seat by the skin of their teeth. The battle between the British National Party and UKIP saw Mike Turner's team comfortably beat the three representatives of the media-puffed establishment safety valve party and poll a respectable 6.4% of the vote.

"I think our vote would have been more than double in the original campaign," says Mike. "I'm certain that some of the votes that went to the Independents and almost all of UKIP's would have come to me first time around and I would have been snapping at the heels of the Liberal Democrat candidates."

In Torbay in May, the BNP fought four seats, polling 16% in Brixham and 14% in Blatchcombe.

PETER PIRNIE: Over-looking Dartmouth.

BNP councillor hounded out of office in Devon

THE British National Party's first ever councillor in Devon, and only second in the West Country, was hounded out of office after just three days by race relations zealots and the media.

Peter Pirnie had been co-opted on to Kingswear Parish Council after contesting the Townstal Ward for South Hams District Council in May. But the Devon Racial Equality Council and the BBC launched a campaign against him, forcing the 49 year-old bus driver and former Labour Party candidate, who has lived in Kingswear for 31 years, to stand down.

"A nasty campaign has been run against me. It has put a strain on my disabled wife Sandra and I must put her welfare first," Mr Pirnie told his local newspaper.

Peter Mullins, the British National Party's South West regional organiser, said: "Peter Pirnie would have made an ideal member of the parish council and it seems a shame that he has been pushed out in this way.

"He's lived in his ward for 30 years and wanted to do something for the community. Peter has been treated unfairly and we are looking to pursue his case under the Equality Act 2006.

THERE were 34 candidates standing at the local elections for Barrow Council in Cumbria, yet the coverage in the local newspaper, the North West Evening Mail, was only concerned with one.

Mike Ashburner was the first ever British National Party candidate in the town, and his name on the ballot paper not only upset the local Labour Party which turned out 20-odd thugs to demonstrate outside the count but also one local journalist.

Natalie Chapples' full page report on the BNP was bizarre to say the least, and sounded more like something out of a school newspaper. There was no pretence of any impartiality or serious reporting, just a rather naive and childlike effort to disparage the BNP's election effort.

"Thankfully people quickly saw through such blatant bias," Mike Ashburner told Freedom.

"I've been approached on numerous occasions since the election by voters saying how ridiculous the coverage was. The favourite quip is that 'Labour won Central ward with just four measly handfuls of votes!' - referring to the Evening Mail calling my 100 votes 'a handful' and 'measly'!"

The reality was very different. Mike polled a very encouraging 10% of the vote in spite of a hostile anti-BNP campaign. Barrow BNP attracted a host of new members and has already signed up three candidates ready to stand for the Party in the town next May.

BNP and HMS Astute launched in Barrow

LAST month Barrow-in-Furness witnessed two very important launches, both of them crucial to the survival of the British people.

On Friday the 8th June, HMS Astute, the first in the Royal Navy's newest class of nuclear-powered attack submarines, was named and launched by the Duchess of Cornwall. Thousands of local people cheered as Britain's latest defence weapon, in an increasingly dangerous world, was rolled out slowly towards the water.

A few days later, the newly-formed Barrow and South Lakeland group of the British National Party was launched at a meeting in the town. So impressed were five people there that they joined up on the spot and another offered to stand for the BNP in nearby Ulverston next May.

Kings Lynn leads the way for BNP in Norfolk

FEELING rightly proud of their local election results in Kings Lynn are David Fleming and Chrissie Kelly - the first BNP candidates ever to stand for election in the county of Norfolk.

An excellent 34% of the vote was achieved after an active campaign which saw the groundwork done in December and January with local activists leafleting the whole of the ward.

Further leaflet drops followed once official campaigning got under way in April with both candidates establishing a good rapport with the local community, so much so that a few days after the election, even though he hadn't won, David Fleming had a local resident call on him for help with a planning problem instead of contacting his newly elected Labour Councillor!

The contest was remarkable for how little evidence there was of the other parties involved. There was barely a single Labour or Tory poster in anyone's window, but plenty of BNP posters.

Of course there was some disappointment that a famous BNP success wasn't scored, but David Fleming believes that the lessons have been learnt on how to turn these good second places into well-earned victories.

"If we had started a year earlier, not only would we have won this ward but we would have fought, and perhaps won, others as well. I am confident of future successes and we are now all looking forward to the European elections in 2009."

The North Lynn campaign has given the BNP in Norfolk a very strong foundation for growth in the Kings Lynn area. It has resulted in a trebling in the number of our contacts and members, which will hopefully prove to be the basis for a viable local group. That is good news not only for Kings Lynn but also for the Norfolk region.

Crime & Antisocial Behaviour Are Out Of Control

Robberies are up, muggings and sexual assaults are up, burglary is up. A wave of anti-social behaviour is sweeping our streets and estates with a minority of rowdy youths making life unpleasant for the law abiding majority. But where are all the police? Sat behind desks learning how to be politically correct?

When the police aren't sat in offices they're far too busy chasing drivers to collect a range of different fines and penalties to help fund the out of touch council. It seems that New Labour view the council as the only real threat to public safety!

But while the police are sat at the side of the motorway or in 'political correctness' dances the real criminals are free to wreck decent people's lives?

The British National Party would put police back on the streets where they belong. Police would not be given their 'narrow' task by politically correct hand cuffs and would be able to deal with criminals without fear of losing their jobs.

But Where Are All The Police?

The Cost of Europe

"Britain's membership of the EU costs the taxpayer £8.5 billion every year"

But the costs of membership are not just monetary...

- ★ Jobs Thanks to the European Union, Britain's businesses are weighed down with bureaucracy and red tape, destroying thousands of jobs.
- ★ Sovereignty The EU is taking power away from Westminster and giving it to the hands of unelected bureaucrats.
- ★ Currency Every member nation will be forced to join the Euro. But means no more pounds, and no more control over our economy.
- ★ Fair Trials The British legal system rests on the rule of innocent until proven guilty. In Europe it's the other way round!

When the 'Party in the Park' became the 'Barbecue in the Barn'!

AGAINST THE ODDS: Red Clare belt out some of their favourites. BNP Party Manager Nick Cass, does the rounds to keep spirits up. The food and music soon made everyone forget about the awful weather, with some guests saying events had transpired to create a great atmosphere.

THE weather conspired in dramatic form to try to bring to an abrupt halt Bassetlaw BNP Group's fund raiser, 'The Party in the Park' on Saturday June 16th.

The huge tarpaulin cover managed to keep the venue sheltered during hours of torrential rain, but unfortunately the surrounding garden flooded.

Just three hours before the guests were due to arrive, Bassetlaw organiser Dave Otter, decided to convert a nearby barn into a waterproof venue. It looked an impossible task in the time left, but many hands made light work and the sterling effort by a few volunteers resulted in tractors being moved, items of junk being shifted, and all in a miraculously short time. The barn floor was then carpeted, picnic tables and chairs were brought in and a barbecue set up to put the show back on the road.

A really good night of food and entertainment was had by all who attended, proving once again that true British grit and determination will always win through.

In the end, the evening event made over £600 - not bad for a washout.

Nicholla Ritchie is new managing director of Excalibur

EXCALIBUR, the merchandise division of the British National Party, was set-up by Chris Beverley five years ago and it has been an expanding business ever since.

For much of this time, the team behind the operation helping Chris were his wife Joanna, Sadie Graham and Ian Dawson. But alas all good things must come to an end! Chris is now a BNP councillor for Leeds City Council and Joanna is a Morley Town councillor. With Sadie now a BNP councillor for Broxtowe, the decision was taken that the time had come to hand over the reins of Excalibur so that they can concentrate fully on their duties as councillors.

The good news though is that they will be on hand to give support to the new Excalibur Managing Director, Nicholla Ritchie.

Nicholla is the BNP's Falkirk Organiser, and at the end of June she spent three days in Yorkshire for training, stocktaking and discussions with Chris Beverley and BNP NICHOLLA RITCHIE: Excalibur.

General Manager Nick Cass, about taking over this key operation. Nicholla has experience in the retail sector and has also worked in her father's business. As well as being a local organiser, she has a proven record as the EBNS (Electronic British Nationalist Service - online Members' Bulletin) Manager and also the Production Manager for the postal version, which she has done on a voluntary basis since April 2006.

Nicholla was behind the introduction of the first range of Scottish BNP merchandise produced earlier this year through Excalibur, which has been very popular. She also stood as a candidate in the recent Scottish Parliamentary elections.

Nicholla will be assembling a team behind her in the day to day running of Excalibur.

A smooth transition is planned over the next month, so Excalibur's loyal customers shouldn't experience any problems. The postal address has changed but the e-mail and telephone number will remain the same. Expect regular announcements in the weeks to come on the website and in Party publications about the new online shop, which has almost been completed by the web team and also, about exciting new offers and products which will be added to the Excalibur range.
